Thoughts on the All Important Question of Easter Attire.

SOMETHING ABOUT COATS

First the Bonnet and All Its Appurtenances—The Gown for This Occasion—Hoods.

It is too bad that Easter comes so early this year. We can scarcely feel bright and fresh and blooming and wear the gay springy attire that so properly accompanies this festive season, when only a short time before the snow fell fast and the wind blew heavily in our faces. We have not yet had time to accustom ourselves to the thought of soft, balmy breezes, bright sunshine, sweet, beautiful skies, gay blossoms of various kinds in fresh, sprightly states, and flowers springing up all over in token of a changed season. We have held up our dresses so long to protect them from the awful mud which splashed from below and the teasing rain and blinding snows that fell from above, that our arms have not yet lost the weary feeling that has arisen therefrom. We have kept our mackintoshes, our rubbers, our umbrellas, our stormy weather skirts and all the other precautions against inclement weather in a prominent place for so long a time that it will be strange to see in their stead a beautiful new gown, a dainty Easter bonnet, a spick and span parasol, a pair of lovely pale-colored is banana-colored wool bengaline. The skirt falls loose about from its wearer most dashingly, particularly at the back, and is plain except for three narrow embroidered bands at the bottom, put on rather far apart, as desired. The bodice has an empire effect, which is relieved at the neck, however, by gathered silk made in a point. This is the way it goes: At the neck, the gathers forming yoke and part of the sides. These are cut right up the middle by a sharp point of embroidery which separates the folds above from the folds beneath. The lower folds form a wide belt and the belt is edged by narrow embroidery. The sleeves are exceedingly large leg-of-muttons, over which a pretty lace ruffle falls, even to the elbow.

The according plaid lends itself most charmingly to the new modes; for it can be made to occupy as much space as one wills, upon occasions, and can also be drawn modestly together so that one would scarcely suspect its amplitude. A pretty bobbinet spring gown is so made, with plain side breadths between the according-plaided back and front. At the back of the dress there is another one of those inverted point effects, where the decoration runs up into a plain back, and sweeps nearly all the space that the plain material intended to occupy. A rolling belt of silk goes round the waist and two short bibs of violet crepe stop at the shoulder seam, never getting so far as the back. The two puffs on each sleeve are also plaited, but the cuffs are plain.

The new coat, if the signs of the times speak truly, will not be so long as the winter one. It will be a rather short three-quarters, or possibly even a trifle shorter than that. The ones that have already come out have fancy fronts, many open all the way down so as to show the front to advantage, and others are caught together at the waist.
